In the letter, Aguinaldo argued that the Philippines had been fighting for its independence for centuries and that the American people should support their cause. He also pledged that the Philippines would be a loyal ally of the United States if they were granted independence.

Historical Context

The Emilio Aguinaldo Letter To The American People was written during the Spanish-American War. The war began in 1898 when the United States declared war on Spain after the sinking of the USS Maine in Havana harbor. The war ended with the signing of the Treaty of Paris in 1898, which gave the United States control of the Philippines.

The Philippines had been a Spanish colony for over 300 years. During that time, the Filipinos had fought for their independence on several occasions. In 1896, the Philippine Revolution began, and the Filipinos were able to establish an independent government. However, the United States intervened in the war in 1898, and the Philippines became a U.S. colony.
